A Message from Christ

Thank you for being a part of the campus community where we care deeply about the safety and well-being of all students. As a reminder, University of Utah students and employees can report an incident of interpersonal violence or sexual assault at the University of Utah by calling 1-866-252-6204. The Center for the Study and Prevention of Violence (CSVP) provides 24/7 support and resources to help individuals navigate the complex process of reporting.

If you or someone you know is experiencing or has experienced interpersonal violence, please consider reaching out to the CSVP for support. The CSVP team is here to provide confidential and confidential consulting services, including outreach, prevention, and intervention strategies.

The CSVP is committed to addressing interpersonal violence and supporting individuals who are affected by these experiences. As we continue to work towards a safer and more supportive campus community, we encourage everyone to take part in this important work. Together, we can create a safer and more inclusive environment for all.

Tune in with the MCVP

In the News

Our educational campaign on harmful behaviors

New Research!

Students' Projects

Upcoming Events

The Conversation

Register here. And to learn more about Hurtado, read this story in attheU. Hurtado's visit is being sponsored by the MCVP and the Martha Bradley Evans Center for Teaching Excellence.

February 2023 Newsletter

We're embarking on new research projects — all while taking care of each other and pushing the boundaries of what we have historically thought of as prevention work.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

Our newest research looks at how college students talk about sexual violence. This is pivotal to ensure that our institutions use language that is respectful and inclusive.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

Our newest research looks at how college students talk about sexual violence. This is pivotal to ensure that our institutions use language that is respectful and inclusive.

The workshops consist of 50-minute sessions from 12 p.m. to 12:50 p.m. on Thursdays, beginning Jan. 26. The workshops will be led by experts in the field and will cover topics such as trauma-informed care, bystander intervention, and cultural competence.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.

In this study, researchers examined the language students use to describe their experiences with sexual violence and perceptions of campus safety versus the language used in university materials.